An update to the American Cancer Society (ACS) guideline regarding screening for the early detection of cervical precancerous lesions and cancer is presented. The guidelines are based on a systematic evidence review, contributions from 6 working groups, and a recent symposium cosponsored by the ACS, the American Society for Colposcopy and Cervical Pathology, and the American Society for Clinical Pathology, which was attended by 25 organizations. The new screening recommendations address age-appropriate screening strategies, including the use of cytology and high-risk human papillomavirus (HPV) A colposcopy is a procedure used to examine tissue on the cervix and vaginal wall. Learn how it is done and when it is recommended.Â Your healthcare provider will insert an instrument called a speculum into your vagina to spread the walls of the vagina apart to expose the cervix. He or she will place the colposcope, which is like a microscope with a light on the end, at the opening of your vagina. The colposcope does not enter your vagina. Your healthcare provider will look through the colposcope to look for any problems on the cervix or in the vagina. Your provider may clean and soak your cervix with a vinegar solution, also called an acetic acid solution. This solution helps make the abnormal tissues turn white and become Colposcopy.
