Whatâ€™s the problem? What did our researchers do? What did our researchers find out? What does the research mean? Good practice in action: managing older workerâ€™s health, safety and health promotion in the workplace. References. Weâ€™re all designed to get older â€“ thatâ€™s part of life. However, statistics show that weâ€™re living longer now than we did before. The number of people in In reviewing accident data, although older workers are at a reduced risk of accidents, they are more at risk of fatal accidents. Ill-health data identify that many chronic diseases can be controlled and adjustments put in place in the work environment. A number of intervention studies were identified but few were of high quality. The research suggests that occupational health intervention can reduce the risk of early retirement from the workplace; health promotion interventions are seen as positive by older workers but it is important to ensure equal access to all workers in such promotions.
