Parent-teacher relationships only work well if a teacher not only puts in the effort to respond to your concerns and questions, but also reaches out to share concerns and compliments with you. What can you do when you think the teacher isn't living up to her part?

Approach Issues Head-On. Dealing with a difficult teacher is hard but not as uncommon as you may think. Some parents shoulder the blame and responsibility for their child's problems, not talking with the school because they feel as if it's their issue alone to deal with. Some parents get the feeling that the school is passing judgment on their parenting when they receive a phone call asking to sit down and talk about their child. That's not always the case. These days, children and teenagers ARE READING (read) lots of books by authors like Stephenie Meyer, JK Rowling and Philip Pullman. Ben, a teenager, says, 'I AM READING (read) a great book at the moment. It IS (be) by a crime writer called Henning Mankel.' His friend Sam adds, 'My favourite books ARE (be) by fantasy writers.' Sam's sister says, 'My parents usually GIVE (give) me books for my birthday and this year, I AM READING (read) lots of short stories. Librarians say, 'It's great. These days, more and more young people ARE USING (use) libraries. They usually START (start) with JK Rowling's books when they are nine or ten years old but then they TRY (try) different authors.'

A book for parents and teachers. By dr. haim g. ginott. Teachers are expected to reach unattainable goals with inadequate tools. The miracle is that at times they accomplish this impossible task. Schools, however, cannot survive on miracles. Every teacher deserves effective tools and skills.Â This book says, Yes. On the basis of techniques developed in child therapy and tested in the classroom, concrete suggestions and practical solutions are offered for dealing with daily situations and psychological problems faced by all teachers. The philosophy of this book is best summed up in the following words, written by the author as a young teacher: I have come to a frightening conclusion. I am the decisive element in the classroom.

Parents teach a lot to the children and the ground made by them shapes the future of the children. On the other hand, someone learns throughout his life and thus become the person he really is. In this learning process, he himself contributes the most and teachers, friends, nature, books, academic education are important as well. So someone himself is the best teacher for him. Besides this the things we learn from our life experiences, teachers and books become far more important than what we learned in our infant time. Parents do their fine duty to raise a child to become a good adult and later he gets the education and experiences from his life and school play the vital role for his future. In terms of being our teachers, our experience and nature play an utmost important role. Teacher benefits. Research shows that parental involvement can free teachers to focus more on the task of teaching children. Also, by having more contact with parents, teachers learn more about students' needs and home environment, which is information they can apply toward better meeting those needs. Parents who are involved tend to have a more positive view of teachers, which results in improved teacher morale. Good two-way communication. Clarity and usefulness of communication: Parents and teachers should have the information they need to help students, in a form and language that makes sense to them. Surprise a parent. Parents are not accustomed to hearing unsolicited positive comments from teachers about their children, especially in a phone call from the school. Borrow this book to access EPUB and PDF files. When being a child, parents teach us how to crawl, to walk, to stand and to talk as well as to behave in proper manners. They teach us know to say "thank you" when receiving a present or help from someone and say "sorry" when doing something wrong. Moreover, they also tell us how to deal with strangers or how to make important decision in our daily life. Parents give us practical knowledge, not sophisticated one at school. For me, my parents are always the worthiest teachers. They always have time, care for me and teach me with all their immense love. Therefore, we have to take better care of our parents to repay their efforts to teach us.

Similar Papers. Classmates Are a More Important Influence Than Parents on a Child's Success in School. love for children. It speaks to how teachers have the power to dehumanize or humanize a child, among other things. It gives practical examples of how to help and support a child in your response, rather than hurt. I am so glad this was available on Amazon, I was moved to buy it as a reference, after I read a quote from Ginott in Rick Lavoie's book Motivating the Tuned Out Child. Read more. This book has been extremely helpful to our family. Shure speaks of Dr. Ginott's influence as beneficial, as do authors such as Faber, Mazlish, and Coloroso. My six year old has learned to think of and evaluate alternatives instead of automatically throwing a tantrum and now I can model better behavior for him because of information from these other authors who were so influenced by Ginott. Parent and Teacher conferences. Communication is an essential component to your child's academic success. By increasing your level of communication, you are optimizing your child's ability to perform well in the educational environment. Teachers, on the other hand, rarely get the opportunity to focus on a child as an individual in the classroom and rarely get to a point where they are just as familiar with a child as a parent is. While there is not a lot of room in the classroom for individualized instructions, it is important for a parent to express the characteristics and qualities of their child to the teacher so that the teacher may have a better understanding of the child as a unique student. Should a situation arise, this information could prove to be exceptional in overcoming that situation.

Parents, undoubtedly can teach and bring their children up as a duty. Some people think that parents in their parenthood, can teach their children better than teachers. Others may argue that parents would not fulfill the job of teachers because of educational methods and knowledge. This essay will look at if parents can even do better than teachers when they teach their children. On the one hand, parents would be better than teachers in educating their children for several reasons. Firstly, children may strongly believe or listen to their parents because of their nature relationship. For example A book for parents and teachers. By dr. haim g. ginott.
