We are grateful to the following colleagues and friends for their kind help in collecting illustration material for this book: Alan Maley, Alastair Henry, David Lasagabaster, Jim King, Julia Chenjing You, Letty Chan, Martin Lamb, Michael Magid, Mike Gow, Mostafa Papi, Neil McClelland, Peng Ding, Peter Edwards, Sarah Mercer, Stephen Ryan, Tae-Young Kim, Tatsuya Taguchi and Tetsuya Fukuda. We would also like to express our thanks to our editors at Cambridge University Press, Jane Walsh, Anna Linthe and Jo Garbutt, who generously supported our project right from the beginning. Finally, our sincere thanks are also due to three anonymous reviewers and the content editor of this book, Verity Cole, who have made some genuinely useful suggestions on how to improve both the content and the presentation of the material. Thank you all!

The authors and publishers acknowledge the following sources of copyright material and are grateful for the permissions granted. While every effort has been made, it has not always been possible to identify the sources of all the material used, or to trace all copyright holders. If any omissions are brought to our notice, we will be happy to include the appropriate acknowledgements on reprinting.

This article is about motivating young learners in teaching foreign languages, especially English language. Here is given types of motivations and how to use them in teaching young learners. Key words: demotivate, motivation, incorporate, visual and aural channel, extrinsic motivation, intrinsic motivation, failure, reprehension, cyclical, attractive, determination, elate, curiosity, provoke.Â Teacher can raise the childrenâ€™s desire to work by bringing things that relate to childrenâ€™s personal experience and interest them into the learning process. For children such a lesson will be much more interesting and stimulating. For instance, any hobby the child has can be incorporated into an English lesson (Underwood 1987: 27).
