Introduction. The Cold War stretched across half of the twentieth century and involved people groups and nations from across the world. The geographic, national and ideological fault lines of the Cold War are still evident in the politics of today. AQA, CCEA, OCR and SQA all offer units covering aspects of Cold War history.â€™ Although AQA and SQA include some elements of the Cold War in Asia in their courses, this is the only Cold War course to focus exclusively on Asia; this course includes four key topics. The initial focus of the course is on the policies of western governments towards post-war Asia, this includes policies towards Japan, China and Taiwan, Korea and Malaysia. You will look at the policies of the US, Britain, the UN and the USSR. This chapter examines the history of the Cold War in Southeast Asia. It explains that the onset of the Cold War coincided with nationalist struggles and decolonization, and explains why Southeast Asians should appreciate that the Cold War is a historical event which has significantly affected the development of their countries, particularly in terms of the role of the Cold War in shaping the political development of the nation-states and interstate relations in the region, and the growing interest in rewriting the history of the Cold War.
