Art Needs No Justification Hans R Rookmaaker

Artists often agonize over their work, even to the point of despair, in the modern world. This booklet by one of the twentieth century's most incisive art historians and cultural critics is a prophetic call to artists-craftsmen, musicians, visual artists and others-in all walks of life to "weep, pray, think and work."

Hans R. Rookmaaker (1922-1977), founder of the art history department and professor of the history of art at the Free University of Amsterdam, made a significant contribution to the Christian understanding of art and is well known as the author of Modern Art and the Death of a Culture (1970). The Complete Works of Hans Rookmaaker (6 vols.) was published in 2003.

Timothy's teachers thoughtfully develop curriculum to take our mission and vision for the school in directions which impact students in the classroom and for life. Called "enduring understandings," the statement for the fine arts department is based on Henry Zylstra's Testament of Vision. The statement follows, and the pictures and samples in this insert show the young artists at work, and some of their work. We will appropriate all of God's creation for interpretation and appraisal from a biblical perspective to e "Artists need no justification. God called them, gave them talents. We cannot go without them." So declared H. R. Rookmaaker in his well-known essay, "Art Needs No Justification". Artists are the ones to create the poems, the songs, the images, the metaphors, the forms that can both express what has been gained in insight, wisdom and direction, and pass them on to others in a positive and incisive way. His arguments are still sound today, and for all the reasons that Rookmaaker set forth art as a discipline and a calling needs no justification for its place in the Christian community. "Bad art with good religion makes a mockery of ...
